Regular Rate through January 15Apply NowProductivityBy Jessica Stillman, Contributor, Inc.com@EntryLevelRebel Everyone says they are stressed these days, but not everyone could mean the same thing. For some people, stress is slightly irritated busier than average day. For others, it means I'm millimetres away from mental and physical collapse. Stress also affects different people differently. What counts as an adrenaline-pumping exhilaration of one person's feeling of exhausting, nerve-destroying torture to another. So when you say I'm stressed exactly how stressed you mean? Should you worry or realize that this is just another hectic day in today's world? Now you have an objective way of saying how stressed you are when you say I'm stressed. This 10-question quiz was created by INSEAD Professor Manfred F. R. Kets de Vries and aims to tell you exactly how close to the tipping point you are. If you answer yes to six or more questions, you might want to start worrying about your stress levels and act. Do you feel that your life is out of control and that you have too much stuff on your plate? Do you often feel confused, anxious, upset, tired, or physically exhausted? Have you had increased people-to-people conflicts (e.g. with your spouse, children, other family members, friends or colleagues)? Do you feel that negative thoughts and feelings affect how you work at home or at work? Does your work or your home life give you any pleasure anymore? Do you feel overwhelmed by the demands of e-mails, messaging tools and social media? Do you feel like your life has become an endless treadmill? Are you prone to serious pangs of guilt every time you try to relax? Have you recently experienced life-changing events such as change in marital status, new duties, job loss, retirement, financial difficulties, injury, illness or family death? When you're stressed, do you feel like you don't have anyone to talk to? Once you've put your answers together and the score worries you, it's time to act, says Kets de Vries. In an accompanying INSEAD Knowledge post she offers a long list of ways to start coping with your stress, while stressing that the first step is always figuring out why you're so worn out in the first place. His recommendations include popular favorites such as more exercise, meditation, taking up a hobby, and volunteering. While all of these are great ways to enrich your life and battle your stress, it's also worth noting that Stanford studies show our attitude to stress has a lot to do with how badly we're affected by it. In many cases, simply re-imagining your stress is not a performance killing, a health-depletion threat, but instead of how useful, advanced in response to short-term challenges can seriously reduce the toll it takes on your body and mind. In other cases, however, mental gymnastics is not going to be cut. Sometimes your situation is really bad and you have to figure out how to rejigger your schedule, your work commitments (or even get out of there completely), or your personal situation. But whatever solution you finally find, the first step to combat figure out how bad the situation is. So take an audit and start. Inc. helps entrepreneurs change the world.
